

SUNCOR ENERGY INC
Form 425
November 12, 2015

Filed by: Suncor Energy Inc.

Pursuant to Rule 425 under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended

Subject Company: Canadian Oil Sands Limited

Form F-80 File No.: 333-207268

Explanatory Note: The following letter was first disseminated by Suncor Energy Inc. on November 12, 2015.

Suncor presents a far more stable platform for longer-term production and dividend growth as oil prices rise, while being more sustainable in the current low oil price environment.

Macquarie Research, October 5, 2015

November 12, 2015

Dear Canadian Oil Sands Shareholders:

There's been a significant amount of discussion in the media about our offer for Canadian Oil Sands. We felt it was important to reach out to you directly to provide you with information that we believe you should have in making your investment decision.

Canadian Oil Sands' Board has told you to "do nothing" to protect the value of your investment. We believe that would be a mistake. We urge you to consider the facts and tender your shares to Suncor's offer.

If you take your Board's advice and "do nothing", you risk that Canadian Oil Sands' Board and management will carry on as they do today, getting paid a significant amount of money to provide quarterly updates on what has been consistently disappointing performance of the company's single asset, over which it has little control.

For you, the stakes are much higher.

Canadian Oil Sands shares have recently been trading at around $10. "Doing nothing" carries the very real risk that Suncor's offer goes away and the value of your shares could fall back towards their pre-bid level of just over $6 per share, and you lose the opportunity to capture a potential 57% premium to the Canadian Oil Sands pre-offer price.

Should that happen, you will be left holding shares in a company which has demonstrated negative free cash flow, about $2.3 billion in debt that is already just one notch above "junk" status, and a strategy based almost entirely on hope. Hope that oil prices will rise and hope that Syncrude will sort out its ongoing operational challenges.

[Canadian Oil Sands'] future share price appreciation potential is largely dependent on higher crude oil prices, and we see material downside risk to the shares from current levels if the [Suncor] offer fails.

Bank of Montreal Research, October 29, 2015

We don't think hope is an appropriate strategy for Canadian Oil Sands. Why? While no one has a crystal ball when it comes to oil prices, the current market outlook doesn't see oil prices getting back to US$60 per barrel until at least 2020¹. Also, Syncrude would have to operate at 100% capacity for the rest of the year for Canadian Oil Sands to reach the 95 million barrels of Syncrude production assumed in Canadian Oil Sands' current guidance

You have an alternative. Tender your shares to accept Suncor's offer and receive:

A potential premium of approximately 57% over the pre-bid price of Canadian Oil Sands shares⁵;

A 45% dividend increase on a per share basis³;

A structure intended to provide a tax-deferred exchange for shares of Suncor; and

Continued participation in Suncor, Canada's leading integrated energy company, with 99% oil price exposure, expected annual five year production growth of approximately 5%⁴ and an ownership stake in a financially stronger, more diverse and more stable company.

Many large Canadian Oil Sands shareholders have told us that, while naturally they would like to see a higher price, they plan to accept our offer and tender their shares. We urge you to consider your best interests and do the same.

Canadian Oil Sands Limited Take the money and run

Desjardins Capital Markets, October 6, 2015

But before you decide, consider the facts:

Suncor's offer now represents a premium on a premium: At 0.25 Suncor shares for each Canadian Oil Sands share, the value of our offer has already increased around $1.00 per share since we announced it on October 5, driven by gains in Suncor's share price

Suncor has delivered superior returns to shareholders: Over the past five years, Suncor has increased its dividend by 190% and delivered a total shareholder return of over 15%. Facing the exact same market conditions and oil prices, Canadian Oil Sands has cut its dividend by 90% and its shareholders have endured a negative total return of 69% during this period. This is the benefit of investing with Suncor and it goes away if you reject our offer.

Canadian Oil Sands has consistently over promised and under delivered on Syncrude's performance.

Canadian Oil Sands has been talking up its hopes for reduced costs and improved reliability at Syncrude for several years now but it hasn't delivered. As you can see in the chart below, in each of the past four years Canadian Oil Sands has set lofty initial goals, and then consistently failed to deliver on those promises.

Canadian Oil Sands Board is asking you to double down on the company's already perilous financial position. With a credit profile one notch above junk status and negative free cash flow, Canadian Oil Sands is already using borrowed money to pay its significantly reduced dividend of $0.05 per share in the hopes that things will get better. Unfortunately, their track record doesn't inspire much confidence in their ability to accurately forecast their business; a business over which they have little control.

Misleading spin. Canadian Oil Sands is misleading its shareholders about the challenges it is facing and about our offer.

On October 19, Canadian Oil Sands CEO Ryan Kubik appeared on Business News Network and said, "We're generating free cash flow for our investors." Ten days later the company issued its third quarter results, which showed that the company actually generated negative free cash flow, not just in the third quarter but for the first nine months of 2015.⁶

On October 2, Canadian Oil Sands told you that Syncrude's operations had returned to normal. Four weeks later, although its news release took great pains to avoid highlighting the issue, it reported Syncrude production levels and indicated plant utilization of just 61%. This suggests Canadian Oil Sands either doesn't understand what is happening with its own business, or it is actively trying to make sure that YOU don't know what is happening.

How can you believe Canadian Oil Sands when it now claims Suncor has important undisclosed information about Syncrude's plans? You can't, because it isn't true. Canadian Oil Sands CEO, Ryan Kubik, chairs the Syncrude Management Committee - he is well aware that ALL of Syncrude's owners have access to the exact same information.

What Mr. Kubik and others at Canadian Oil Sands seem to be talking about is Syncrude's 2016 budget, which is prepared by the operator. Here's the news: there is nothing to support Canadian Oil Sands' claim that things are suddenly going to get better at Syncrude. In fact, from what we and other Syncrude owners have seen so far, we expect the budget to show production in a similar range as Canadian Oil Sands' 2014 and 2015 initial guidance. And, as history has shown, there is significant risk that Canadian Oil Sands will under-deliver on these expectations. Operating and capital expenses are expected to be about the same as what we have seen this year. Finally, there is nothing preventing Canadian Oil Sands from releasing its view of Syncrude's budget, or any additional information about Syncrude, prior to the expiry of our offer on December 4, 2015. These are the facts, inconvenient as they may be for Canadian Oil Sands. For its part, Suncor plans to release its 2016 budget and guidance in the week of November 16, including its expected 2016 share of Syncrude's production and costs.

It's time to act.

Since our original approach to Canadian Oil Sands in March 2015, the Canadian Oil Sands Board and management have had more than 6 months to present shareholders with a superior alternative.

While urging you to do nothing, the only thing they appear to have done is change the rules by implementing a new 120-day poison pill, without shareholder approval, to protect their positions while denying you the right to act in your own best interest and tender your shares to our offer before it expires.

We think you deserve better.

Doing nothing is saying no to receiving premium value and potential upside with Canada's leading integrated energy company. Doing nothing risks your share price falling back to where it was before Suncor's offer and losing the opportunity to realize an approximate 57% premium to our pre-offer price.⁵

Time is running short. We encourage you to take action, including getting your own independent financial or other advice, to capture the value of Suncor's offer for yourself.

Tender your Canadian Oil Sands shares to accept our offer before it expires at 5:00 p.m (Calgary time) on December 4, 2015.

We appreciate your time and consideration.
